Lesvos - 2026

04th May – 12th May 2026

TOUR SUMMARY:

SUMMARY

Our now famous, spring tour to the magical island of Lesvos, Greece was once again a wonderful insight into the northward spring migration of birds from Africa heading up to their breeding ground in northern Europe. Our week in May was a little later than we normally do, but having witnessed the slight change in migration patterns and timing over the last few years, it seemed a good bet. And we were spot on, with the first half of our tour seeing many migrants and the second half seeing all the breeding birds in and either singing or displaying on territories. The nearby Alykes wetlands were a magnet for many birds with their wet seasonal pools attracting all the species of heron, egrets, ibis and storks. Even Dalmatian Pelican, Collared Pratincole and 5 species of tern. The star bird of the island, the Kruper's Nuthatch may have proved more difficult as the birds we knew were nesting had all fledged, but we found one and got superb views. A real highlight was seeing over 20 Eleanora's Falcons in one area around Ipsolu Monastery, this was single biggest number we had ever seen together. Another highlight was our encounter with three Hawfinches including a mating pair. This is a hard species to connect with on the island. Then a very rare (4th record for Greece) Lesser Flamingo was seen on our first day among the many Greater Flamingos. We were lucky that more species of butterfly and dragonflies started to appear, and we also found a few special flowers and orchids. Several sightings of Stone Marten, a mustelid that is seen dead on the road far more than alive, was a surprise, and a new taxon was added to our tour as Leslie introduced us to the world of Tree Galls. With fantastic company, a lovely taverna lunch and dinner, beautiful scenery, and the wonderful friendliness of the locals, the island delivered its magic as always.

HIGHLIGHTS

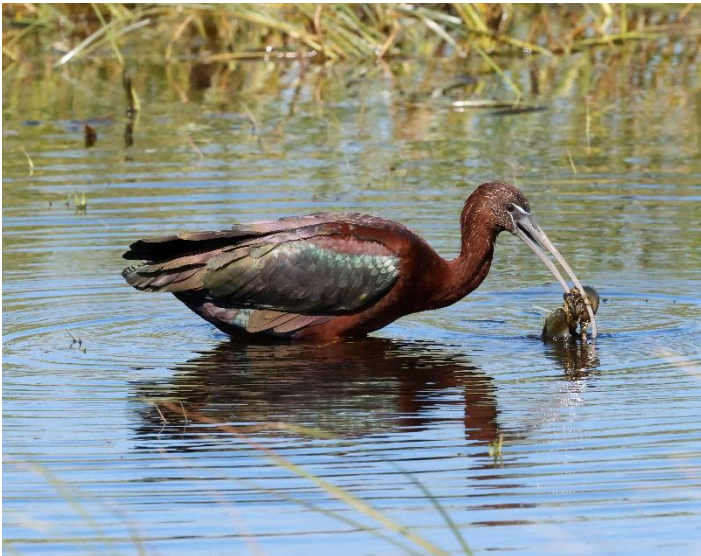

Either for rarity value, excellent views or simply a group favourite.

- Lesser Flamingo
- Long-eared Owls
- European Bee-eater
- Middle Spotted Woodpecker
- European Scops Owl
- Olive-tree Warbler
- Little Owl
- Eleanora's Falcons
- Red-throated Pipit
- Little Crake
- Eurasian Spoonbill
- Little Gull
- White-winged Tern
- Collared Pratincole
- Marsh Warbler (singing)
- Pied Avocet
- Long-legged Buzzard
- Little Bittern
- Eastern Bonelli's Warbler
- Kruper's Nuthatch
- Cinereous Bunting
- Dalmatian Pelicans
- Hawfinch
- Whiskered Tern
- Alpine Swifts
- Sombre Tit
- Masked Shrike
- Short-toed Treecreeper
- Mediterranean Shearwater
- Black Terns
- Red-footed Falcon
- Woodlark
- Rufous-tailed Scrub Robin
- Black-headed Bunting

And so, our tour begins with the first visit to the Alykes Wetland which was teeming with birds including many fantastic close views. Here were just a couple of the Black Storks feeding right in front of us.

Other birds like Glossy Ibis and Squacco Herons were not only plentiful but very confiding

So many good birds in one spot – White-winged Tern, Dalmatian Pelican and Great Egret

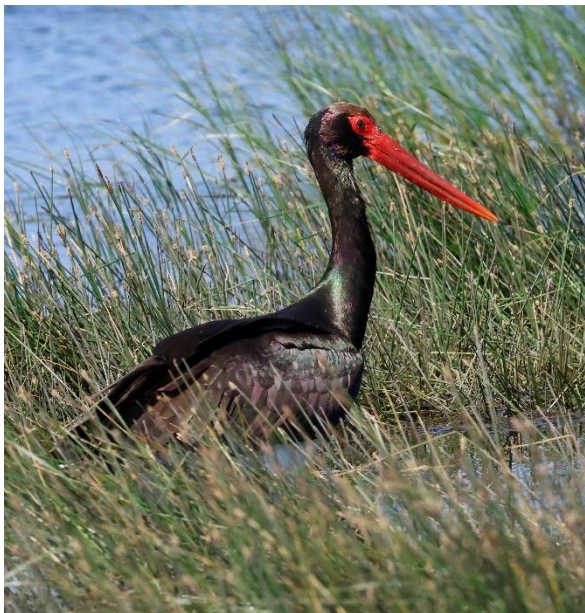

We got such great looks at many terns. Here is one of the Whiskered Terns and a White-winged Tern

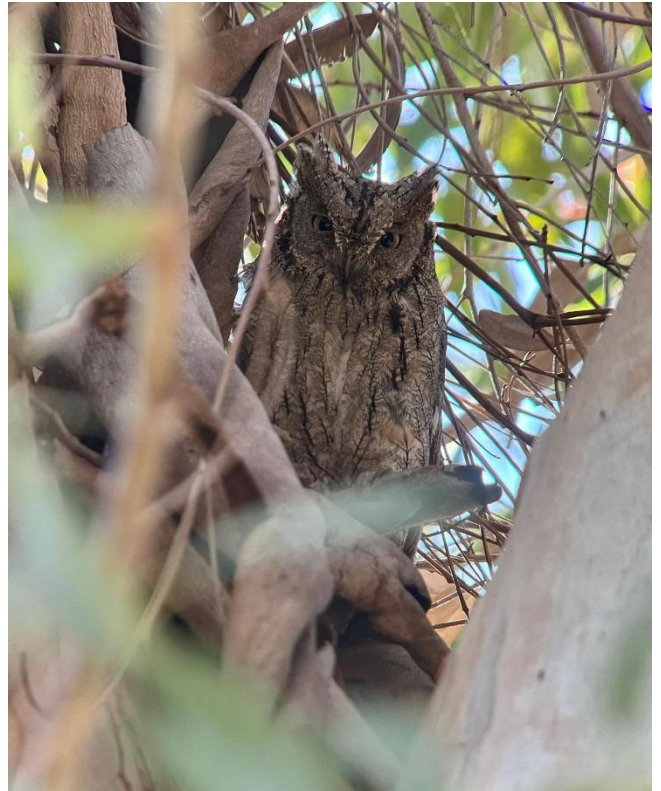

A visit to the nearby bakery by some of the group, found this male Collared Flycatcher and a showy male Red-backed Shrike

Back to the wetlands again and the Black Storks were so close, as were hunting Gull-billed Terns

Our next targets were to see a couple of day roosting owls. We had already checked these out and potentially found where they were sitting a few days before. Two adult and a big chick Long-eared Owls were found and in a different area, a very well hidden Scops Owls was overshadowed by a second easier bird we found.

We got to see a few Lesser kestrels, and here this female showed very well

On a hillside we watched 11 Red-footed Falcons with both males and females hunting and perching, it was fabulous!

One of the star birds of the island, the Kruper's Nuthatch was found near a recently fledged nest site and seemed to be starting their second brood in a new nest hole in a different tree. This great photo was by Leslie Flint, tour participant

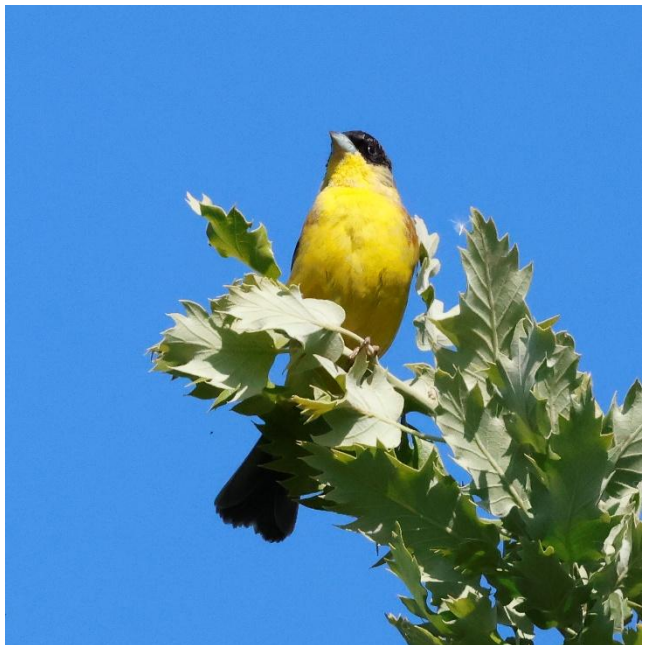

In the pine forests we stopped to look at a single and very rarely seen orchid the Eastern Hooded Helleborine (Cephalanthera epipactoides) and met a guy that had been searching for this white flower for 16 years. We also saw plenty of Violet Limodore's

There are always a few special things on the island aside the excellent birds, and this Odalisque (Epallage fatime) is one. It is a very od damselfly and one we like to try and find and indeed did. The butterfly is a little more common and is a Lesser Spotted Fritillary

And then it was time for the late migrants to arrive. Several species do not appear until the beginning of May. We found the first Rufous-tailed Scrub Robin and then Black-headed Buntings arrived in force.

Laughing doves arrived on the island just 4 years ago and now have spread to many towns and villages, where they are now nesting each year. This one was at Sigrí

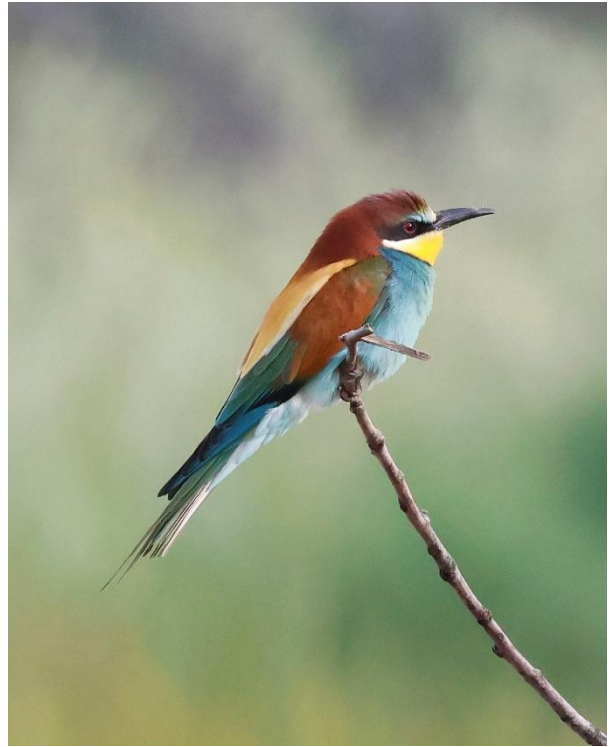

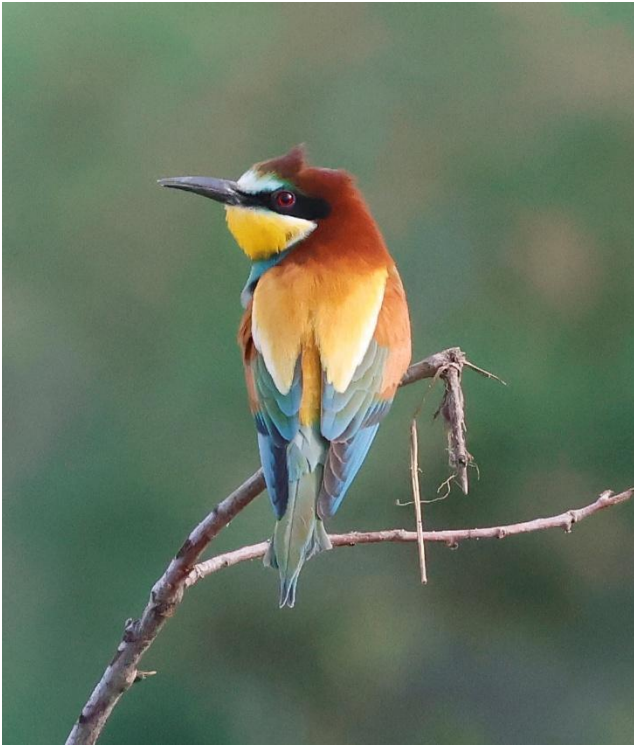

So many highlights, but a special one was seeing over 20 Eleanora's Falcons while we were at Ipsolu Monastery. Both dark and light phase birds were seen well

A walk along the east side of the salt pans in the morning gave wonderful views of Greater Flamingos and a close Dalmatian Pelican

One of the most striking and colourful birds is the European Bee-eater and we got wonderful views

There were interesting bugs around including the endemic Lesvos Bush Cricket and a Smyranean Bush-Cricket

In the hillside we found Masked Shrikes (Photo by Abby Sesselberg) and the sometimes very tricky Sombre Tit

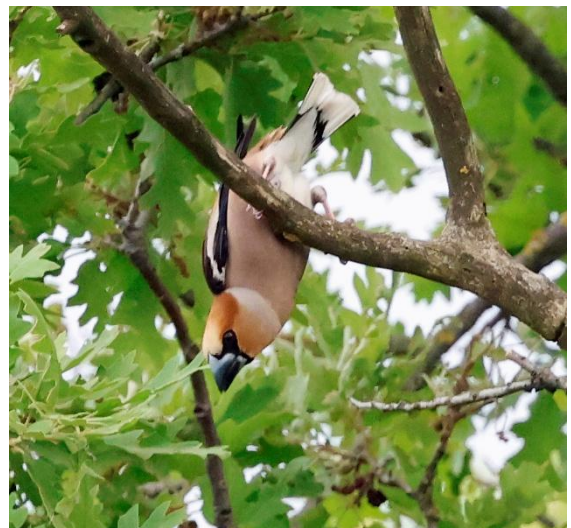

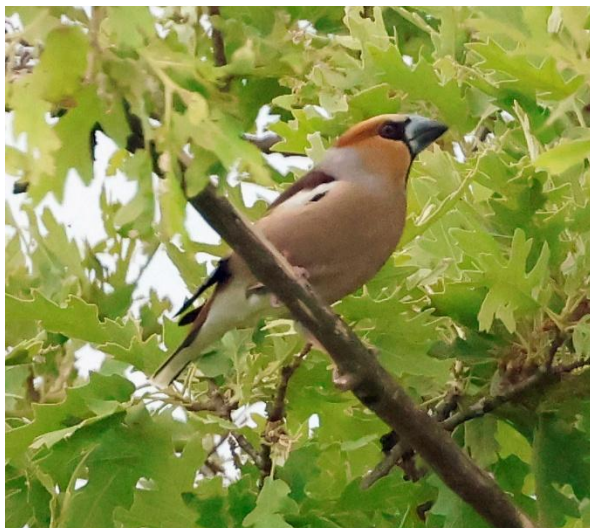

At a spot we know very well we got superb views of the localised Cinereous Bunting singing from rocks and tops of bushes. We also had a close Black-headed Bunting in the same spot

Under a rock we found a lovely Mediterranean Chequered Scorpion, while several day flying moths Synaphe moldavica were spotted in the grasses

What a surprise it was to see not one but three Hawfinches together. A particularly hard bird to connect with having only seen it a handful of times over 20+ years. We even watched them mating!

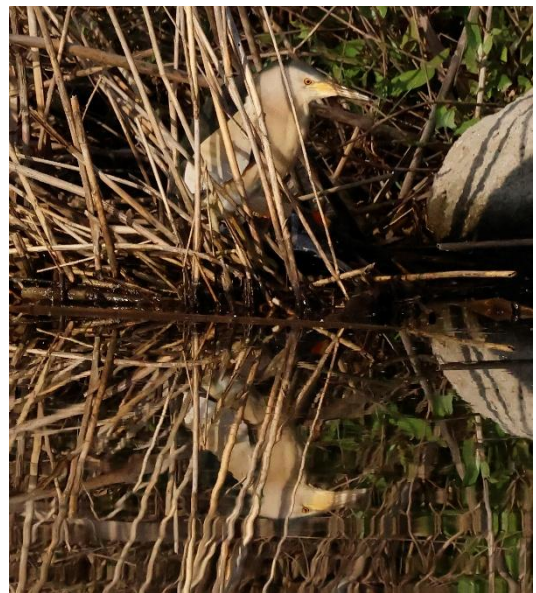

We got wonderful looks at perched Woodlarks and then on our way to the salt pans this Little Owl was spotted perched nicely on a wire right over the road

Next day we took a pleasant walk along the side of the Potamia River, actually it's a small stream. But here found some of the first dragonflies of the season with Small Skimmers and Green-eyed Hook-tailed Dragonflies

Little Bitterns are another favourite and seen at several places during our tour.

A couple of other interesting sightings included this Eastern Balkan Green Lizard and a very nice Homer's Orchid (Ophrys homeri)

Beautiful Demoiselles were common up at Mt Olympus and this Southern White Admiral showed well

Among the many flowers at Mt Olympus were Orange Wild Tulip and lots of Provence Orchids

We often saw Mediterranean Shearwaters at great distance but on one day on the south coast they came through much closer in groups of 20 - 40, and in total we saw about 1,000 in just an hour.

And there's more with this Green-winged Orchid and Toothed Orchid

And finally, something completely different, thanks to Leslie Flint. These are a few of the tree Galls, she found and identified during our tour. I don't know any other groups have ever shown anything like these. We love new things to look at and we love Lesvos

Dryomyia circinans

Andricus insanus

Plagiotrochus quercusilicis
